Academic Probation

Academic probation may be imposed for various reasons and for varying lengths of time depending upon the circumstances. In general, academic probation is recommended for students without a college degree (students are encouraged to complete a degree prior to training, due to hiring requirements in the U.S.) and/or who are English language learners and/or have an undergraduate GPA below 2.7.

Academic probation is usually six weeks in length, or in the case of a summer course, through the first winter seminar, and requires that the student be in good standing the entire period in order for academic probation to be lifted.

In order to be in good standing, the student must demonstrate the following:

• All assignments must be turned in by the due date.

• All assignments must be complete and of an acceptable standard as determined by the Director of Training.

• All assignments must be of the student’s own work.

• The student must be in attendance each day unless approved by MCM.

For any student unable to obtain full student status, the remaining tuition will not be required.

Pending successful completion of the probationary period, the student will then be changed to full student status.

I have read the above information on academic probation and agree to its conditions.
